

Sharon Raszap Skorbiansky is an Agricultural Economist in the Commodity Analysis Branch of the Economic and Policy Analysis Division of the Farm Production and Conservation Business Center. Her work includes the analysis of feed grain and hemp markets. Prior to joining the Business Center, Sharon was an Agricultural Research Economist at the Economic Research Service, where she studied the price efficiency of thinly traded commodities, agricultural contracting, and rice markets. Sharon received her PhD in Agricultural Economics from Purdue University in 2015.